Comments: The protection of our electrical energy supplies at the consumer level is an issue that transcends narrow business concerns. In our society, we have come to rely on electricity for everything from pumping water out of our wells to ensuring our meats are properly cooked. In the 21st Century we should have electrical supplies that hold up in the face of nature. Underground lines is a way to provide this reliability. Together, we can share the cost and make this happen for everyone, not just those who live in newer developments.
